What is Costa Rican slang?

SHARE IT! I love Costa Rican slang. Costa Ricans have an unusual amount of slang words and some sayings are known as "tiquismos". In other words, you will only hear most of these phrases in Costa Rica. Knowing the gist of most of these words makes me feel like a real part of Costa Rican society.

Why do Costa Ricans call themselves tiquicia?

This might be the national saying of Costa Rica. Many Costa Ricans refer to their own country as tiquicia. This is what Costa Ricans call themselves. This is partly due to the way Costa Ricans use descriptions when they talk. Often instead of using the diminutive -ito such as chiquito (small) Costa Ricans will instead use -ico, as in chiquitico.

What does rejado mean in Costa Rica?

In Costa Rican slang, it means being in a traffic jam. Costa Rican slang for a person who likes to brag. When something is "rejado", it's really amazing. Literally translating to tighten it up, you will often hear this word when people want to go faster (like in a car) or hurry something up.

What does bretear mean in Costa Rica?

It is used in verb form as well- "bretear." One of my favorite Costa Rican slang words, this word literally translates as "to the chile." It can be used often in casual conversation with the word mae as in al chile, mae (dude, it's true). This word is so uniquely Costa Rican that it's not even funny.

What does nonsense mean in Costa Rica?

When someone is talking nonsense, they are talking papaya (the fruit). *Costa Ricans are known throughout Latin America for using the phrase hijue puta liberally. Hijo de puta literally translates to son of a whore, but Costa Ricans don't seem to find the phrase offensive and use it in front of children.

What do you call people from Costa Rica?

You can call people from Costa Rica "costarricenses" or just "Tico" or "Tica". Often instead of using the diminutive -ito such as chiquito (small) Costa Ricans will instead use -ico, as in chiquitico. A "mae" on the beach. This word literally translates "to the chile."
