Who owns Hess Oil & Chemical?

Before the merger, Hess Oil and Chemical developed the Hess Oil Virgin Islands Corporation (HOVIC) Refinery on St. Croix, United States Virgin Islands, at the time the largest oil refinery in the world. After 1998 the refinery built by HOVIC operated under the name HOVENSA. It is a joint venture with PDVSA and is 50% owned by Hess Corporation.

Why did Hess Oil come to the Virgin Islands?

Hess Oil came to the Virgin Islands only when colonial exceptions to federal law were guaranteed. Paiewonsky invited them to the islands in the belief that only industry could break out of the colonial history of the place.

Why did Hess Oil go to St. Croix?

Hess Oil only came to St. Croix when colonial exceptions to federal law were guaranteed. This arrangement lined the pockets of Hess Oil's shareholders and government agencies, leading to an industrialized economy on St. Croix that became dependent on its secondary status in relation to the mainland.

Is Hess 'terrified' to face juries in the Virgin Islands?

Hess is "terrified" to face juries in the Virgin Islands, where it has benefited from generous tax breaks while causing "devastating" damage to St. Croix's air quality and water supply, the creditors wrote. Those fears grew especially acute after the passage of a 2021 local law that expedited trials for claimants that are elderly or in poor health.

Why did Hess pay $150 million to a St Croix refinery worker?

In December 2023, Hess Corporation was ordered to pay $150 million to hundreds of former St. Croix refinery workers and their families who were injured by asbestos exposure. Litigation had been ongoing since 1997.

Will Hess go to trial in a Virgin Islands asbestos case?

Hess has never gone to trial in a Virgin Islands asbestos case, settling more than 1,000 cases to date, according to the creditors. The case is HONX Inc, U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas, No. 22-90035. For HONX: Christopher T. Greco, Matthew C. Fagen, Jaimie Fedell and Heidi Hockberger of Kirkland & Ellis LLP.
